Eva's hard work has finally paid off. She's landed her dream job and is moving with her boyfriend, Sascha, to London. But when Sascha informs Eva that he won't be joining her after all—and she finds out he's been seeing someone on the side—Eva is forced to face a harsh new reality, alone.

Just when she thinks things can't get any worse, Eva's parents get in a car accident, and she's called home to the bucolic village of her childhood to take care of her father. There she meets her new neighbor, the devilishly handsome David—and discovers that her feelings for him are more than just neighborly. Soon their complicated commitments pull them in different directions. Will the two be able to break down the barriers that keep them apart?
