The princes, noblemen, and gentlemen of Christendom must have ascertained, by reading or their own experience, that, constituted as society at present is, they possess no adequate security against a challenge or offence.

Major Dawson, with whose com'age and good hiunour we are familiar, was challenged by a brother officer of equal rank, for merely pressing him to take another goblet; and General Barry was challenged by a Captain Smith, for refusing to take wine with him at dinner in a steam packet. The General in vain attempted to excuse himself, by declaring that wine invariably made liim sick at sea. Dr. Dodd says, " I have known a challenge sent to a person for going out of the room abmptly, and leaving a man of honour in the midst of a dissertation." We could name a thousand instances like those, which remind us of the quan-el between Viola and Sir Andrew Ague, in which the latter says, " You broke my head for notling;" and Viola replies, "You drew yom^ sword upon me Avithout cause."

In the cabinet, the senate, and the courts; the masquerade, the ball-room, and the theatre; the club-room, the tavern, and the street; in every situation, and in every company, the inconsiderate behaviour of one individual may involve the feelings and the existence of another.

Members of the royal family, ministers of state, legislators, judges, and other public functionaries, who might well have pleaded their official situations, have yielded to the pressure of a practice wlich they secretly condemned. Even preachers of the gospel have engaged in single combat; * and General Hamilton, after writing against dueling, was unfortunately tempted to meet Aaron Burr, by whose band he fell a victim, on the very spot where his son had fallen before him. Who, then, can justly be surprised if the youth of Oxford, Cambridge, Eton, Westminster, and minor schools, should frequently commit themselves in mortal combat; or that persons in more humble walks of life, should hold themselves amenable to what the world has called the laws of honour
