Some books will tell you that the only good orgasm is one where you stare at one another with open eyes while both of you climax at the same time. Really? I can't do it unless both my eyes are shut and I have a pillow over my face. Everyone is different.

Sometimes you might love to gaze into your partner's eyes. But there are going to be moments when the distraction of focusing on the other person takes away from the intensity of the experience for you. It is important to experience sex as it relates to you. Be selfish with your feelings, and take inventory of your reactions. This will allow you to go with the intensity and get lost in the experience. There is nothing sexier than a partner who is totally captured by you in bed.

Being ravished is wonderful, and being the one who ravishes is even better. But great sex happens in your own mind and in your own body. Don't ignore your partner because their pleasure will give you pleasure. But it is in your own private experience within that you will learn what you need in order to experience "great sex" moments.
